Concurrency: Practice and Experience
Editorial Board

This is my occasional letter to the editorial board of Concurrency: Practice and Experience. I believe that the journal is doing quite well in an era that presents challenges to both journals and their publishers. Our success comes from the increasing relevance of its theme of practical concurrency, several excellent special issues and, of course, from the Editorial Board's help in suggesting referees and encouraging submission of good papers. To continue our progress, I have revised the "aims and goals" of our journal, and enclose this for any suggested improvements. I took the liberty of using this new version with our June 1997 special issue on "Java for Scientific Computing," but clearly further changes can easily be made.

I had noticed that your participation with the journal had been modest recently and wondered if you still wished to remain on the board! Please do tell me if you wish to continue (which I would be happy to happen) and if so, I look forward to your help in the future. What ideas do you have now?

Yours Sincerely,

Geoffrey C. Fox
